Focus on the Action

Tyler Parmelee

by Art Hickman

Tyler Parmelee is Marist water polo's leading scorer this year, and a dedicated athlete in the off-season. He participates in swim-team during the winter, and bicycles year-round. Despite being a star player since his freshman year, he remains humble about his impressive achievements. "He has arms like trees," said friend and teammate Mike McGirr, referring to Parmelee's impressive shooting ability.

MASSES of Classes

Juniors put the "celebrate" back in the celebration of the Eucharist at their class Mass.

By Pat Bartels

Last Thursday the student body celebrated not just one but three masses. Priests from around town came to help out.

Newly ordained Father Gus from the Newman Center celebrated the Mass for the seniors in the cafeteria.

Father Tom, from St. Jude's celebrated Mass for the sophomores and juniors combined in the gym.

Father Dave celebrated Mass in the theater for the freshmen who also viewed their Lock-In videos.

The Campus Ministry Team believes that having class masses helps to strengthen the bond between classmates.

Vive la Pétanque!

By Amy Parks

Marist pétanque lost to Churchill High School this Thursday, making their record 2-2. They have two more games and one tournament left for the fall season. Because only three schools in our area have pétanque teams, the Marist team will play each of them twice.

When asked what he likes about the sport, coach Ryan Baker said, "What's not to like? It's so challenging. It's great competition."

Tradition is at the end of each match, both teams share food they've brought and everyone eats together.

Caffeine Craze

By Kristen Lee

I have endured a caffeine experiment over the past two weeks. Drinking a 16oz coffee every morning for a week, I felt energized throughout the day until night came and both my body and mind crashed. I found myself going to bed earlier and earlier. Then, I gave up my coffee habits and turned to caffeine free tea. My first symptom of caffeine withdrawals consisted of severe drowsiness. The second was a constant headache for two days. At this point I knew my body had become reliant on the caffeine. Finally, after a week of depriving my system of the coffee I am able to endure a full day of all natural energy.

Junior, Jordan Poet, consumes on average two coffees per day (2-4 shots). Depending on the amount of shots he intakes affects him differently; less shots equal more jitters, more shots equal calm and awake. Starbucks being the only place Jordan is willing to purchase coffee, each day they have a cup prepared with his name written on it. Is he addicted? I assume you know the answer.

Newspaper Editors Press On

By Erica Little

Newspaper editors Jordan Schrader, Art Hickman and I went to Corvallis with our advisor Toni Cooper for the 23rd Annual Fall Press Day at Oregon State University to learn about writing and editing for the school newspaper.

Toni, Jordan and I decided that we would go to Bob Welch's talk while Art entered an editorial cartooning competition and found we weren't disappointed.

The thing that stuck out to me the most was that in order to write a good column, you need to inspire hope with what you know.

Seniors Erica Little, Jordan Schrader, and Art Hickman return from a trip to OSU.

Honoring the Honor Society

By Rebecca Hanson

The National Honors Society inducted its new members based on their character, scholarship, leadership, and service on Wednesday. The newly elected National Honors Executive Committee presided over the ceremony including seniors Vice President Cody Pinto, Secretary Mike McGirr, Treasurer Anna Guzikowski, and Public Relations Manager Erin Miller. Newly elected senior Jared Christian will serve as President.

The new members recited the National Honors society oath, and then each individual was given their NHS certificate before signing the official NHS member book where years of Marist students have left their mark. There were a total of 60 members inducted, both juniors and seniors.

Newly inducted senior Jared Christian signs the NHS book while Erin, Cody and Mike look on.

Who woulda THUNK it?

By Jordan Brandt

Who woulda' think that Peilin "Allen" Xie likes to break dance, and has been doing it for a year. He likes to dance to anything by Trio or any good hip hop songs. When asked if he represents in the streets he said, "Yes, three times in China, it was no competition."
